Summer 2003

How exciting the moments of transition can be. It is at such moments that one captures an objective view of the past and a prospect of progress and achievements yet to come. At such a moment, one is privileged to pause, as I do now.

I look back with gratitude for all of the achievements that my colleagues have wrought. We have been blessed with strong trustees who have never wavered in their vision of advancement for Mary Baldwin College. And we have been blessed by faculty and staff of extraordinary ability and dedication who have worked together to implement that overall vision in remarkable ways. Everyone here, whatever the job or position, contributes to our collective sense of purpose, to our well-being and accomplishment.

How can one do other than rejoice? Mary Baldwin's history has been one of achievement despite all odds. We are a resilient, optimistic, forward-looking institution. Those of us here today have been able to build upon the strong foundation laid by those who came before us. We have done so because we believe deeply in the importance of our mission, encouraged by the knowledge that our students will carry the benefits of our work with them, and that the college we love will continue to benefit as well.

It is not up to me to set the course for the next several years. I do, however, take great satisfaction in knowing that Mary Baldwin College today is strong, positioned well for whatever the next steps will be. There is vast potential, not only in the ways we recognize now but, I am sure, in many unforeseen directions.

Dan Orogan

As I begin watching Mary Baldwin from a distance, I shall applaud the leadership of our next president, Pamela Fox. I shall help her whenever she asks. I shall help the college in every appropriate way.

Think about it this way: Most loyal alumnae/i spent four years or fewer on this campus or earning a degree through one of our regional centers. You are enduringly in love with this college. For many, it has been a transforming experience. Multiply your length of time to arrive at my total of 18 years. Yes, I am as supportive and loyal as that!

I call on you as alumnae/i, parents, friends, donors — and on all of the community embraced by Mary Baldwin College — to stand with Dr. Fox to create our future. I have every confidence that she will be an extraordinary success, and I wish her very, very well. I hope she has as much joy in her work as I have had. She can have no greater reward.

President Tyson's Extraordinary Record: How Did She Do It?

BY JAMES D. LOTT

Back in October, when Claire Lewis “Yum” Arnold ’69, chair of the Mary Baldwin Board of Trustees, announced to an assembly of faculty, staff, and students that Cynthia Haldenby Tyson, president of the college since 1985, would retire at the end of the academic year, you could hear an audience-wide intake of breath. Then there was silence, the sort of silence you always get when you give bad and unexpected news. Then when Cynthia stood up to speak, there was long and loud applause.

When she spoke, she did something typical. She assured the audience that everything would be fine, just fine, that the transition would be smooth, and that MBC would continue to thrive. I say this talk was typical because Cynthia — thoughtfully and deftly — turned our attention away from herself and to the college.

I was one of several people in the audience who had been there when she gave her first talk to the college in early fall 1985. In that address almost 18 years ago, she spoke words of praise and admiration for the people — faculty, staff, and administration — who worked at Mary Baldwin (words we weren’t much accustomed to hearing before Cynthia arrived), and she laid out clearly her vision of an exciting future despite the rather formidable challenges that faced us all. She got a warm reception.

The one remarkable difference between the reactions to the earlier speech and to the recent one is that the latter prompted a standing ovation. In fact, when Cynthia stood up before colleagues and students last October, everyone rose with her to acknowledge her, and when she finished her brief remarks, everyone stood again and clapped until Cynthia had to ask everyone to stop and sit down.

It is unusual in modern higher education to see a college president serve as long as Cynthia has. But it is phenomenal to see a president, after all those years, still have the respect and affection of faculty, staff, students, and alumnae/i. No other college or university president in Virginia comes close to the length of Cynthia’s tenure in office — the longest among MBC’s presidents. Few in the country do. And those years have not been particularly easy ones for the college or for its president.

Cynthia has had to make tough decisions: She has pushed untiringly for improvements in programs, dealt with the impact on the student body of a fast-changing social ethos, coped with competing claims on a budget that never had sufficient revenues to allow her to do everything she would have liked, and represented the college forcefully and cheerfully to all its external constituencies. And after all those opportunities to offend faculty and staff and to lose student, trustee, and alumnae/i support, Cynthia leaves with two standing ovations.

We tend to divide leaders into those who are well liked and those who deal determinedly with controversial issues, but Cynthia belies that division. She has been an outstanding leader who has effected great change at MBC, but she has exerted her leadership in ways that cause people to respond to her with respect and affection. How has she done it?

Because I worked with Cynthia as a member of her administrative team for 15 years, I should be able to tell you the secret of her successful leadership, but I can’t. In fact, there probably is not one single secret. Several years ago, when I was working on a task force that led to the Virginia Women’s Institute for Leadership — a program that was primarily Cynthia’s brain child — the group spent a lot of time discussing qualities of leadership, particularly those we should try to develop in young women. One day, a student member of the task force said, "Why don't we just clone Dr. Tyson?" In a way, what we are doing for all our students in all our academic programs is showing them an example of excellent leadership by showing them Cynthia.

‘... it is phenomenal to see a president, after all those years, still have the respect and affection of faculty, staff, students, and alumnae/i.’

And they do see her! One astonishing fact about her leadership style is that she is ubiquitous, or she seems to be. Unless she is off campus — and that is usually because she is traveling for the college — she attends every athletic event, every student art show or theatrical production, every student government occasion, every VWIL parade, every Adult Degree Program orientation, every Junior Dads dance, everything, in fact, in which students are involved. She regularly has students for lunch to hear what they are concerned about. She also goes to Hunt Dining Hall and stations herself at a table to invite students to talk to her.

Part of Cynthia's success is her ability to communicate. She is a powerful speaker, and she loves to get out from behind the lectern, stand as close to her audience as she can, and engage them. When she is forced to speak from behind a lectern, she rises on her toes as if she wants to vault over the thing and pull the audience physically into an understanding of what she is saying. And if the talk comes after dinner — an alumnae/i or a prospective-student event, for instance — she will have spent all the time before the meal (and even during it) circulating among the diners and greeting each individually.

I sat one evening with a prospective student and her parents. Cynthia stopped at our table and engaged everyone in spirited conversation, then moved on to the next table. When she gave her talk later, she said that several students had told her what they were interested in studying, and she mentioned each by name. That fall, the student at my table was on the first row at freshman orientation.

But Cynthia's success comes from more than being everywhere at once and communicating effectively. She has a marrow-deep sense of mission, and she is like a bulldog (English, of course!) in pursuing her one goal: ensuring the future of Mary Baldwin College.

Cynthia envisions the college as a mini-university serving a diverse population of students and preparing them to be successful in a world that refuses to stand still. Everything she has accomplished reflects that vision: the economic and racial diversity of our students, new programs like VWIL and graduate study in teaching and (with Shenandoah Shakespeare) in Shakespeare, expansion of the Adult Degree Program and the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted (in its infancy when she arrived), additional support for the college among our alumnae/i and others, a remarkable increase in the college's financial resources, and improvement in its physical plant. No one is better than Cynthia at asking for money!

She is also the most practical of people. She understands that you reach your goals by working with people and that people come together with all sorts of concerns, agendas, prejudices, ideas, feelings, attitudes, and degrees of intelligence. And when all that mix of stuff causes a project to bog down or an idea to get bushwhacked, Cynthia accepts the inevitable, regroups, and moves on. It's as if she has determined not to waste her formidable energy on lamenting what didn't work out but to remain focused always on the future and its opportunities.

Her manner — a student once told me that "Dr. Tyson sure is perky" — can delude people into thinking of her as an eternal optimist, the type who always sees the glass as half full, not half empty. But those who work closely with her come to realize that with Cynthia it is more complicated than that. She recognizes that it doesn't matter whether you call the glass half full or half empty. You don't waste time exulting over the former or lamenting the latter. What matters is what you do with whatever water there is.

These are some of the qualities of character that have served Cynthia — and the college — well. But she really does escape analysis. One quality I haven't mentioned was captured by a caricature of Cynthia from her days at Queens University in Charlotte, North Carolina. It shows a young woman, indeed a perky young woman, bounding along a campus sidewalk smiling happily, apparently unaware that she is several feet off the ground. Whatever that cartoon was meant to convey — spirit, optimism, enthusiasm — what it also shows is sheer verve, sheer joy in being and doing.

I think the secret to Cynthia's success — and the reason we all still love and admire her — may be that she takes such joy in her life and her job and her colleagues (with all their foibles) that she makes us all feel more joyous as well, about ourselves, about our roles in the Mary Baldwin story, and about each other.

James D. Lott started at Mary Baldwin College in 1964 as part of the English Department and became dean of the college in 1986. A member of the search committee that recommended President Tyson for her position, he retired in 2001 as dean emeritus and professor of English emeritus and is now a trustee.

More students. Overall enrollment more than doubled to more than 2,000. Undergraduate on-campus enrollment up by half to about 900. Sharp increases reflected in all programs, including two begun before Tyson arrived: PEG and ADP. MBC is the largest women's college in Virginia.

Stronger students. Record number of applications last fall yielded a class with average SATs among the highest in decades. Entering GPAs also rose.

Greater diversity. Third of on-campus undergraduates are women of color and international students.

Added dollars. Record fund-raising campaigns, including the largest, at the time, among women's colleges in Virginia. Endowment tripled. Annual Giving more than doubled.

More programs. Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership, Master of Arts in Teaching, M.Litt./MFA in Shakespeare and Renaissance Literature in Performance, Health Care Administration, Master's programs planned in counseling psychology and business.

Campus improvement. New PEG Center, rehabilitated Administration Building, renovations to other buildings, heightened technology everywhere. Five regional centers.

High rankings. U.S. News & World Report top tier of master's level universities in the South. Before the change in classification, which acknowledges a growing array of distinctive graduate and undergraduate programs, MBC was consistently ranked among the 10 best liberal-arts colleges in the South.

Recognition for President Tyson

Presbyterian Church

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has named Mary Baldwin President Cynthia H. Tyson one of this year's recipients of its Higher Education Award.

The award honors those who have made outstanding contributions to the church's mission of higher education. The church noted Tyson's nearly two decades as president of an academically strong institution that encourages character development and leadership.

Founded in 1842, Mary Baldwin is the oldest women's college in America historically associated with the Presbyterian Church. Founder Rufus W. Bailey was a Presbyterian minister.

Assembly, Trustees

The Virginia General Assembly and the Mary Baldwin College Board of Trustees have adopted resolutions honoring President Cynthia H. Tyson. The General Assembly cited Tyson's "exemplary service and dedication to the college, to the Staunton community, and to the commonwealth." At their April meeting, trustees presented Tyson a framed copy of a resolution praising her "visionary leadership," warmth and humor, and the "indelible mark" she leaves on the college, "positioning Mary Baldwin to move forward as it continues to nurture young women and develop unique opportunities for women, and men, of all ages to follow their dreams."

Virginia's governor, Mark R. Warner, praised Tyson in a letter presented to her in Richmond.

The full text of the resolutions is linked from the MBC news and events Web page: www.mbc.edu/college/news.

Honorary Degree

At Commencement May 18, on behalf of trustees and faculty, Jeffrey L. Buller, dean of the college, bestowed an honorary doctor of humane letters on Tyson. He noted, especially, her impact on higher education well beyond the college.

"She's recognized by college presidents and administrators, elected officials at the local, state, and federal levels, and business and community leaders across the country as someone who gets things done, who stands up for what she believes in, who's always gracious, who's increased opportunities in higher education, and who's made the world a better place."

DAR Americanism Medal

The Daughters of the American Revolution has bestowed upon President Cynthia H. Tyson one of its highest awards: the Americanism Medal, given to naturalized citizens who have shown extraordinary leadership, trustworthiness, service, and patriotism.

In making the presentation at the college January 15, Caroline D. Bell, regent of the Beverley Manor Chapter of the Virginia DAR, praised Tyson's long service to education and to Staunton and her adopted country. Bell noted that Tyson, in a talk to newly naturalized citizens in Staunton two years ago, spoke of "courage, choice, and commitment." Said Bell: "Dr. Tyson's citizenship is exemplary, defining her own courage in choosing a new country and her strong commitment to its people and to the common good." She said Tyson "has won the affection and esteem of all who know her."

Born, reared, and educated in England, Tyson earned a Ph.D. in English language and medieval English literature at the University of Leeds in northern England, where she also completed her bachelor's and master's degrees. Tyson began her distinguished career in American higher education as a Fulbright scholar and lecturer. She became a U.S. citizen more than 20 years ago.

Before coming to Mary Baldwin in 1985, Tyson was vice president for academic affairs and chief academic officer at Queens University in Charlotte, North Carolina. She holds certificates in Management Development for College and University Administrators from Harvard's Institute for the Management of Lifelong Education and Institute for Educational Management.

The first woman to be elected president of the Rotary Club of Staunton, Tyson has been active in her community through service on many boards, including those of the Frontier Culture Museum; Shenandoah Shakespeare; and SAW, the Community Foundation of Staunton, Augusta County, and Waynesboro.

Phi Beta Kappa

President Tyson was elected an honorary member of Mary Baldwin's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, the nation's oldest and most prestigious society for students of high academic achievement.

Jeff Buller

Dean of the College

I first met Dr. Tyson on a very cold and icy morning in February after flying up from Georgia to interview for the dean-ship. We had had to change the interview schedule completely because most of the people I was supposed to talk to were unable to reach campus early that day. So, although Dr. Tyson and I had originally been scheduled to begin our conversation sometime in the afternoon, it ended up being my very first meeting. We chatted for a bit about general things — the weather, how my flight had been, that sort of thing — and then suddenly, in what seemed completely unrelated to what we had been talking about, she looked right at me and said, "Well, of course, Mary Baldwin College is and has been, at least at the traditional undergraduate level, a college for women. And what I want to know is: How do you feel about that? Do you find it an interesting prospect, or do you see it as more of an obstacle to overcome?"

It was such a direct question that I remember thinking: Here's someone I can learn a lot from. She's flexible; she's reorganized her whole day just for this meeting. She's candid; she certainly put her cards right on the table just now. And she's so gracious about everything that you feel perfectly at ease even when shot between the eyes like that. Most important of all, she really seems to be interested in hearing my answer.

Well, first impressions are very important, and they certainly were that day. So many of Dr. Tyson's wonderful qualities came through in that very first conversation. She had me at "Good morning."

Lee Stuart Cochran

Trustee, Shenandoah Shakespeare

Cynthia Haldenby Tyson has not only been a sterling president of MBC, she has been a premier citizen of Staunton. She has achieved the perfect balance of service to town and gown.

I have served with Cynthia on various boards and committees. Her dedication to the Shenandoah Shakespeare program and her active participation at the Frontier Culture Museum have greatly enriched both.

Her leaving will cost me a good friend and cost Staunton a brilliant leader.

George M. Cochran

Retired Virginia Supreme Court Justice,
Trustee Emeritus

I had the honor of presiding at the ceremony in which Dr. Cynthia H. Tyson was installed as president of Mary Baldwin College. It was a happy day for the college, for the Staunton community, and for the Commonwealth of Virginia. Her awesome energy, searching imagination, and communication skills made Dr. Tyson a leader in all her activities. She brought Mary Baldwin to a high level of success. She brought the college and the local community closer together in friendship.

As an active volunteer or gubernatorial appointee, she brought her ability and personality to cultural and educational activities of importance to Virginia.

Distinguished educator, admirable citizen, energetic leader — that is how she will be remembered.

Jacqui Elliott-Wonderley '93

Dean of Admission and Financial Aid

I met Dr. Tyson as a junior in high school during an admissions overnight. In her presentation to prospective students, Dr. Tyson said I could accomplish anything at Mary Baldwin. I believed her.

So I came to Mary Baldwin as a freshman in 1989. Within the first six weeks, Dr. Tyson knew my name. She would greet me on the sidewalk as she went to a meeting or to some other function on campus. Her stride was quick and her smile wide. She was a role model to me as a student because she was a powerhouse. I respected her. She was everything I thought a leader should be.

Now I am an alumna and administrator of the college. My views of her haven't changed, only gotten stronger. Dr. Tyson has touched the lives of many people during her tenure at Mary Baldwin. She has certainly touched mine. When I count the blessings in my life, I count Dr. Tyson twice.

Leah Griffith '03

2002-03 President,

Student Government Association

To students, Dr. Tyson is known for her famous laugh and "Mary Baldwin women work hard and they play hard." To students, Dr. Tyson is a supporter, cheerleader, and nurturer.

I have had the privilege of seeing Dr. Tyson interact with numerous Mary Baldwin constituents, from students to trustees. The best description of her leadership and compassion for Mary Baldwin is genuine love.

As I reflect on my four years here and the various opportunities I have had, I agree with a comment made at a memorial service by the father of a student who passed away this fall. He said that Mary Baldwin holds a spirit over any student, staff, or faculty member, or anyone who comes in contact with the institution. I would add that Dr. Tyson truly represents and nurtures that spirit and passes it on to others.

James Harrington

Professor of Education/Adult Studies

In the fall of 1985, early in her first year as our president, Cynthia and I traveled to Southside Virginia Community College to attend opening ceremonies for our regional center there. Because of the geographical and political layout of the region, the organizers felt it was important to have multiple ceremonies: in Emporia, Alberta, and Keysville. In each location, all of the local dignitaries, mayors, state senators, and delegates were assembled, and the speeches were lavish and extensive. At every stop during this long day, Cynthia amazed me and our hosts with her immediate grasp of the situation, her mastery of the names and positions of the various community leaders, and her capacity to focus the crowd's attentions on the important educational and economic issues at hand.

What I remember about the long drive home was that Cynthia was expecting company that evening and had to get home to prepare a dessert that involved peeling grapes. That was my initial exposure to Dr. Tyson's energy, stamina, and charm.

Rudy and Aremita Watson

Parents of alumnae; Aremita Watson is a trustee and former chair of the Parents Council; Rudy Watson is a former member of the Advisory Board of Visitors and its executive committee.

Dr. Tyson is an educator, administrator and leader with bold ideas, courage, action, grace, wisdom and professionalism. Upon enrolling our first daughter at MBC in the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted, we were comfortable knowing that MBC was a good place that could meet her needs. Our meetings over the years in various capacities with Dr. Tyson, her staff, and faculty convinced us that MBC was the best place for all three of our daughters. She shared and understood our family's goals for them, and her leadership fostered an environment for those goals to be attained.

Marlena Hobson

Assistant Professor of Art

President Tyson has been an inspiration to many of us. Her energy and optimism have helped us through what seemed to be very rough times. I have appreciated her sincere empathy and attention to personal concerns — and, of course, her sense of humor, in particular the many very funny moments at

Friday afternoon faculty meetings.

Those were wonderful heartfelt laughs, and I shall truly miss them.

Roderic Owen

Professor of Philosophy

Many of us have been amazed at Cynthia's ability to remember personal names and to speak extemporaneously (or at least to give that appearance!). Those abilities have served this college so very well with her work to build bridges between the various constituencies of MBC. From the Parents Council to the Board of Trustees, Cynthia has known every individual and known how to support and nurture each individual's sense of connection to Mary Baldwin College. With our own faculty and staff, she not only knows our names but has always been among the first to write a note of concern or to call when someone becomes ill, has suffered a loss, or is celebrating a special event. Moreover, Cynthia has always been quick to congratulate and thank faculty, staff, and fellow administrators.

About 10 years ago, I asked Cynthia what was the single most difficult challenge of her presidency at that point. Her answer: simply finding the time and energy to fit everything in. From social events with alumnae/i, speaking at VWIL functions, welcoming ADP students at orientation, to chairing both the monthly faculty meetings and weekly executive staff meetings, there was Cynthia Tyson: firm, resolved, thoroughly prepared, open to debate — but also prepared to make a decision and take action. She has never faltered.

Ethel M. Smeak '53

Professor Emerita of English

My first memory is Cynthia's initial meeting in the Student Activities Center. She addressed all of us: faculty and staff, buildings and grounds, housekeepers, dining room staff — everyone was invited. And she praised all of us. We, who had known few kind words, just looked in wonderment at this tiny woman.

My second memory is Betty Kegley [now professor emerita of physical and health education] coming down the hill as I was walking up it. She said, "Hurry! The president is washing her own car!" By the time I got there, there were only puddles of water, but that was clear evidence.

These two instances characterize Cynthia Tyson as our president. She is herself; she cares about everyone; she knows this college and everyone in it. And, despite all of her accomplishments, she never thinks that she is better or more important than the least of us. She has been the perfect role model for all.

Tyson Says Thanks

Faculty, students, and staff have collected memorabilia — letters, photos, newspaper clippings, and even e-mails — and presented them in albums to President Tyson at a college and community reception on campus April 3.

Later, offering thanks to all who have observed her long service and pending retirement in one fashion or another, she wrote:

"I am deeply grateful. I cannot begin to tell you how meaningful all this is to me. Instead I shall repeat what I said to those assembled at the party last Thursday evening when I referred them to my text for all of these wonderfully moving events: Jane Austen's Emma. In that novel, Mr. Knightly says to Emma, who has been waiting for profuse expressions of devotion: If I loved you less, I could talk about it more.

Frankly, I find it impossible, likewise, to tell you adequately the depth of my commitment and affection for you and this college. We simply have to live it out and recognize the unspoken communications of the spirit.

Thank you all. I shall not say good-bye because I shall come back in the capacity of volunteer, when asked.

But, for now, I am deeply grateful, respectful and blessed by all of you."

"We had two unique ideas about how to do teacher education: base our work in the inquiry method and involve practicing teachers as partners with graduate faculty in educating new teachers — our teaching partners approach."

Graduate Teaching Program Marks First Decade

BY GEORGE GRAVES

Mary Baldwin College's first graduate program — master of arts in teaching — is observing its 10th anniversary as it continues to expand and evolve while retaining its distinctive characteristics.

"We have much to celebrate," says MAT Director Carole C. Grove. "We have produced some of the finest teachers — men as well as women — for the schools in Virginia and beyond. We have continued our strong programs in elementary and middle-school education while most recently adding endorsements in special education in the areas of learning disabilities, mental retardation, and emotional disturbance. And we offer an add-on endorsement in gifted education."

Added Grove: "The Graduate Seminar program has matured into Professional Development Institutes that serve area educators along with our students." And MAT has hired its first graduate assistant, Emma Leed.

MAT students are drawn to Mary Baldwin for many reasons. Some are seasoned instructors who want advanced training. Others are changing careers. Still others are starting out and want strong preparation before they enter the field.

"I became interested after reading about the program's focus on inquiry-based learning and on the liberal arts," says Leed. "I received my undergraduate degree in English from a small liberal arts college — Centre College in Danville, Kentucky — and I felt very fulfilled and enriched by the liberal arts education. Mary Baldwin has offered me the chance to further my liberal arts education while pursuing my goal of teaching. The small class sizes and the fact that each class is taught by a graduate faculty member and an experienced classroom teacher were also important factors in my decision."

The MAT Program observed its first decade with a conference at the college April 12. The keynote speaker was Carol Tomlinson, a professor in the University of Virginia's Curry School of Education and a national leader in teaching, in one classroom, children of differing abilities and preparation. Virginia Superintendent of Public Instruction Jo Lynne DeMary briefed conference participants on trends in Virginia's public schools.

Among those who helped start and shape MAT are Virginia R. Francisco '64, professor of theatre and holder of the Margaret Hunt Hill Distinguished Chair in the Humanities, and Patricia Westhafer, professor of education. "Mary Cooper, the first director of the MAT Program, called Patty and me the foremothers of the program," says Francisco. "I'm pretty proud of that!"

"When we were planning the program," says Francisco, "we already had established our record of leadership in educating adults through the Adult Degree Program. We debated other ways we might serve adult students, particularly women. We started the MAT because research indicated a need for a graduate-level program here, and MBC has long been known for preparing excellent teachers."

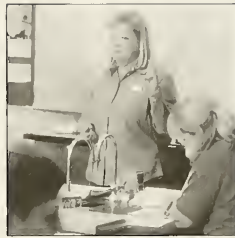

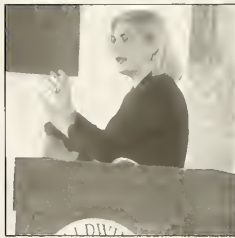

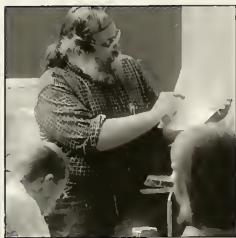

"Best of all," recalls Francisco, "we had two unique ideas about how to do teacher education: base our work in the inquiry method and involve practicing teachers as partners with graduate faculty in educating new teachers — our 'teaching partners' approach. Inquiry teaching and learning is all about questions. Students and teachers, at any level, define and ask questions, decide on a method of investigation, and then gather information and evidence. Finally, they develop and test a tentative answer or conclusion that they apply to new information or experience."

"That seems simple," observes Francisco, "but no one was — or is — doing those things. We also involved teachers and principals in planning the program, starting with a summer conference at which we asked them: What do new teachers need to know or be able to do?"

"Teaching partners have been a strikingly important aspect of our program," says Francisco. "My partner, Kathryn Ward, was a kindergarten teacher. She participated in planning the MAT Program and teamed with arts faculty to devise Inquiry in the Arts, the course we still teach together. Sally Rule-Gwinn was in our very first arts class and in the first cohort of MAT graduates. Today she teaches at Bessie Weller Elementary School in Staunton and partners with us to teach the arts class. These women know what's going on — in today's classrooms, in the current research, with parents and young students. They're indispensable to the work we do in preparing new teachers."

Added Westhafer: "Mary Baldwin's being an innovative place, it seemed appropriate that we branch out into offering a master's degree. We thought that the students in the Adult Degree Program who had degrees and wanted to obtain a teaching license could not only get licensure but the master's degree as well." Also, practicing teachers are encouraged to pursue graduate degrees — and people in other occupations view the MAT as a way to prepare for a second career.

The proposed program had to overcome concerns about stretching available staffing and straying too far from the liberal arts. "President Tyson and Jim Lott, the dean at the time, were supportive, which helped enormously," says Westhafer. "The faculty load was still an issue, but we decided to go ahead and design a successful program that would allow us to hire more faculty." Reassuring to all was that the MAT, consistent with Mary Baldwin's history and mission, would combine the liberal arts with the new professional training.

Westhafer credits Francisco with being "instrumental in getting the program off the ground. She worked countless hours fashioning policy, publicizing, writing grant proposals, and applying for certification from various agencies."

And well off the ground it is. The MAT Program has operations in Roanoke, Richmond, and Charlottesville besides Staunton. Some 85 students were enrolled this spring.

"The MAT Program is challenging," says Leed, the graduate assistant, "but very rewarding."

Mary Baldwin Part of National Project To Improve Teacher Education, Training

Mary Baldwin College has received a three-year grant of more than $24,000 to participate in a national effort to improve teacher training. Mary Baldwin offers teacher education through both undergraduate and graduate programs, including its Master of Arts in Teaching Program, observing its 10th anniversary.

The Standards-based Teacher Education Project was created by and is managed by the Council for Basic Education and the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education. STEP brings together colleges and universities, elementary and secondary school instructors, and state education officials. It emphasizes that teachers must know the subjects they are teaching, how to teach students to learn at high levels, and how to monitor and assess learning.

"This will give us an opportunity to review our graduate education curriculum to ensure that it is meeting the needs of teachers for today's classrooms," said Carole C. Grove, director of Mary Baldwin's MAT Program. "This initiative is also to ensure that liberal-arts courses and professional standards are connected. We will specifically review the curriculum for alignment of our program with Virginia Standards of Learning (SOLs) and discipline-specific standards of knowledge and skills. We will look at accreditation issues in preparation for the next re-accreditation visit."

Grove and Robert Grotjohn, associate professor of English, will oversee MBC's involvement in the project.

The Council for Basic Education is a national nonprofit organization that advocates a standards-based liberal-arts curriculum for all students. CBE provides a wide variety of standards-implementation services to states, school districts, and schools. CBE's programs and publications are intended to strengthen teaching and learning in the liberal arts to prepare students for lifelong learning and responsible citizenship.

The American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education is a national, voluntary association of colleges and universities with undergraduate or graduate programs to prepare professional educators. AACTE supports programs in data gathering, equity, leadership development, networking, policy analysis, professional issues, and scholarships.

Pamela Fox, Miami University Official, Named Next President of Mary Baldwin

The Mary Baldwin College Board of Trustees has chosen the college's ninth president: Pamela Fox, a dean and administrator at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. Praised for her strong, dynamic leadership, Fox is also widely respected as a scholar, teacher, and fund-raiser. She will take office July 1, succeeding Cynthia H. Tyson, who is retiring after a record 18 years in the post.

The announcement, by Claire Lewis "Yum" Arnold '69, chair of the MBC Board of Trustees and a member of the search committee that recommended Fox, was made April 2 to students, faculty, and staff in Francis Auditorium in Pearce Science Center. There, six months earlier, Arnold had revealed Tyson's pending retirement. Tyson applauded the choice — as, literally and long, did the hundreds assembled. "We are proud that she has come to Mary Baldwin," said Tyson. "I am confident of her success here."

"I am deeply honored to join the Mary Baldwin community," said Fox, dean of the School of Fine Arts at Miami, ranked among the country's best public universities. She spoke of Mary Baldwin's "deep spirit of place," its "power of community," its "balance of tradition and innovation," and its "personalized education that transforms lives."

Arnold lauded Fox's "strategic vision," strong credentials, and "enthusiasm for fund raising" — all enabling the college "to continue on the trajectory of innovation and scholarship for which we are known."

Louise R. McNamee '70, vice chair of the board and head of the search committee, described Fox as "thoughtful, passionate, energetic, and caring. Her presence conveys those attributes immediately — and that's enormously beneficial in this position."

Faculty and student representatives on the committee were also impressed with Fox, who was selected after an intensive and highly competitive national search.

"Dr. Fox's career has demonstrated strong commitment to the liberal arts and impressive administrative leadership and vision," said Anne McGovern, associate professor of French. "She understands Mary Baldwin's many strengths as well as the challenges that face the college." Roderic Owen, professor of philosophy, said Fox is known for being able to "view the big picture — not only advocating for her department or the School of Fine Arts but also energetically working on behalf of the entire university."

Leah Griffith '03, president of the Student Government Association, cited Fox's "ambitious spirit and wisdom" and her enthusiasm for women's education.

The Miami School of Fine Arts is one of the few in the country to encompass art, architecture, music, theatre, interior design, an accredited art museum and a renowned performing-arts series. As dean, Fox has brought distinction and considerable funding to the school, which has 1,000 students and a faculty of more than 150. She has increased the diversity of students and faculty, led planning for a $70-million center for the arts, and introduced ever-larger numbers of Miami students to the arts — an achievement of which she is especially proud.

In addition to her extensive and demanding academic duties, Fox has had responsibility for long-range planning at Miami, first as special assistant to Miami's provost and now as assistant vice president of planning. She chairs a Miami council with representatives from throughout the university that is developing ambitious goals to mark the institution's upcoming bicentennial. Miami seeks to be an even more prominent leader among public universities that emphasize undergraduate education while providing significant graduate and research programs. Fox has shaped and implemented large-scale initiatives to strengthen liberal-arts education and the experience of first-year students at Miami.

Born in Texas and reared in central Ohio, Fox began playing the piano at age 5. She went on to earn three degrees from the University of Cincinnati's prestigious College Conservatory of Music: a bachelor's in piano performance (summa cum laude), a master's in music history, and a Ph.D. in musicology. She also has studied in Germany.

Fox began her career at Miami, north of Cincinnati, 20 years ago as an assistant professor of musicology. A popular and award-winning instructor, she eventually became chair of the Department of Music and then dean of the School of Fine Arts.

Fox is an authority on 18th-century composer Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, a son of Johann Sebastian Bach, and on music in Boston at the turn of the last century. She has written widely about both and on other topics. She also has presented many scholarly papers throughout this country and abroad.

After studying the evolution of C.P.E. Bach's handwriting and the physical structure of his scores, Fox re-dated more than a quarter of his compositions and posed a new interpretation of his stylistic development. Her book, Sonatas from Manuscript Sources. C.P.E. Bach: The Collected Works, Series I. Volume 6.5, is being published this year by the Packard Humanities Institute in collaboration with the Bach-Archiv Leipzig and Harvard University. In her work on another book, Cultural Counterpoint: Musical Life in Boston 1890-1920, Fox says she is recreating, through oral histories and documents, a period when music "in tenements, Symphony Hall, and vaudeville" — written and performed by Bostonians of different ethnic groups and class origins — "resonated harmoniously."

Fox has been a leader in regional and national education and music associations. She has been a consultant or examiner for the National Endowment for the Humanities and Yale University Press among others.

Fox is married to Dan Layman, senior director of development in Miami's Office of Development. Layman said he and Fox are avid hikers and are eager to explore the Shenandoah Valley.

Pamela Fox's Remarks To Students, Faculty, Staff

April 2, 2003

Good afternoon and thank you. I am deeply honored to join the Mary Baldwin community. Over the past several weeks, I have enjoyed meeting a cross section of the college's constituencies: students from all programs, faculty, staff, administration, trustees, alumnae/, and parents. I was very moved by the depth and breadth of dedication. I want to thank everyone for the warm welcome.

As you know, Mary Baldwin has a deep spirit of place — a power of community that enables personalized education that transforms lives. This transformational quality is a common thread uniting the college's unique constellation of programs.

I am committed to 21st-century liberal education. A reinvigorated liberal education is integrative: It integrates self and society, general education and majors, and in-class and out-of-class experiences to foster personal success and an ethical global citizenry. The learning-centered environment is a principle of Baldwin's past, present and future. The college is a model for the national movement to set greater expectations for liberal learning.

Thanks to the inspiring leadership of President Tyson, Mary Baldwin is strongly positioned for the future. As we look ahead, we will honor the balance of tradition and innovation, the imperative of leadership-oriented education for women, and the entrepreneurial spirit. Most important, we will nurture the spirit of place and power of community. Thanks again for your generous welcome. Dan and I very much look forward to joining you.

Mary Baldwin Goes to War

In Iraq during the war, Kimberly Primerano, left, and Sherri Sharpe, both Class of 1999, stand in front of the Chinook helicopter that Sharpe has been flying.

Sherri Sharpe '99, a helicopter pilot who is one of more than a dozen Mary Baldwin graduates who have been serving in and around Iraq, has received national media exposure, including a lengthy segment on NBC television's "Today Show."

Sharpe, who went through MBC's Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership and completed a tour of duty in Afghanistan, is an Army captain who flies Chinook helicopters. She has been ferrying supplies — food, water, ammunition — and mail from Kuwait into neighboring Iraq.

Sharpe volunteered for the hazardous assignment. Chinooks are large and travel fairly close to the ground. They can be inviting targets for anti-aircraft guns and other weapons. Saying she "wanted to make a difference," Sharpe said in the April 9 "Today" broadcast: "You don't do that in the rear — you do it here."

One of the toughest parts of Sharpe's mission was what she sometimes brought back from Iraq: the bodies of soldiers and Marines killed in action.

"That could be me," Sharpe acknowledged in the network interview. "Nobody wants to admit her own mortality. Every day you're faced with that."

Sharpe said she, like others in the war, often thinks of her family, especially her husband, Kirk Leek, her 5-year-old stepson, and her parents. Her father told "Today": "I never held her back. I always wanted her to do what she wanted to do."

Why does Sharpe fly helicopters? "I always knew I was going to go into the Army," she said. "It's either walk or ride."

A remarkably high proportion of former VWIL students have been deployed in connection with the war in Iraq — nearly half of the 35 young women to go through the relatively new program and commission in the armed services. About a third of the graduates have commissioned.

Among those who have been directly involved in the war is one of Sharpe's classmates, Kimberly Primerano, a communications officer with the Marines in Kuwait and Iraq. Two current students, members of the reserves, were called to active duty.

Sharpe is not the only pilot. Kristin Ohleger '99 flies helicopters for the Navy, serving in Afghanistan and then in the Iraq theatre of operations. And Rebecca Gross '01 is a Navy helicopter navigator in the region.

Jamie Lynn Cross '00, a Navy lieutenant on a ship in the Gulf, was highlighted in publicity by the Department of Defense's American Forces Information Service. Cross "is similar to other women her age — and, then again, she isn't."

Cross has been commanding two dozen sailors and three chief petty officers and oversees all weapons operations on a destroyer. The ship was the first to respond to a terrorist attack on a French-owned supertanker off the coast of Yemen last October. Cross, says her mother Jayne Cross, "has never been so scared in her life."

Other former VWIL students who have been or were expected to be part of the war or its aftermath:

Class of 1999: Katherine Grisdale, Army Signal Corps, who put in two tours in Kosovo; and Michelle Rogerson, Army ordnance officer.

Class of 2000: Charlynda Kelly, Air Force intelligence officer monitoring the Middle East from Germany; and, all serving in the Navy on ships in the Gulf — Kathleen Beckley, Brenna Kelly, Colleen Lowe, and Tamara Scaramozzi.

Class of 2002: Monica Choi and Rachel O'Connell, Army Chemical Corps; and Jessica Durbin, Army Military Police.

"VWIL is about challenge, commitment, leadership and service," said its director, Brenda Bryant. "It is no surprise that many of our graduates not only choose to commission, but also volunteer to serve in combat situations. They are focused, proud and confident; they are truly inspirational."

Brig. Gen. N. Michael Bissell, VWIL commandant and a highly decorated veteran, notes that the program "stresses unity, discipline, management, leadership skills and the importance of public service.

VWIL cadets graduate with poise, confidence and a determination to do the best they can in everything they set out to do. "They are always on parade." And sometimes, in disproportionate numbers, at war.

Student Lands Pilot Training

Julia Ireland '04 is the first Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership cadet to qualify for pilot training with the U.S. Air Force. She is one of fewer than 500 cadets nationwide to earn this opportunity.

Successful applicants are chosen on the basis of various tests and achievements, including cumulative GPA, standing in their units, physical fitness scores, field training, and flight hours accumulated toward a private pilot's license.

Ireland, who will be commissioned as a second lieutenant upon graduation, will train for about two years before being assigned to a squadron. Then she will serve 10 years of active duty.

"Opportunities are endless, and she is only limited by her ability," said Capt. James Romansz, instructor of aerospace studies at Virginia Military Institute. "Based upon her performance as a cadet, she will do extremely well and go far."

A business major from Hamilton, Virginia, Ireland is a Bailey Scholar and a member of the Ethics Debate Team and the VMI/VWIL chapter of the Army Aviation Association of America. She runs cross country for MBC and is slated to be the company executive officer in VWIL this coming year.

Brenda Bryant, VWIL director, said that Ireland will be the program's fourth aviator. Sherry Sharpe '99 is an Army helicopter pilot, Kristin Ohleger '99 is a Navy helicopter pilot, and Becky Gross '01 is a Navy navigator.

New PEG Center Dedicated

The new $6.7-million Center for the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted was dedicated April 5. The recently completed structure between Jesse Cleveland Peace Science Center and Martha Stackhouse Grafton Library is home to many of the nearly 80 students who enter college early.

U.S. Representative Bob Goodlatte, whose district includes Mary Baldwin, praised the program at the dedication as "a huge draw" for bright young women, many of whom "enter the fields of math, science, and technology."

A.S. Sullivan Foundation Gives Funds for Scholars

The Algernon Sydney Sullivan Foundation has given Mary Baldwin College $24,000 for scholarships and $7,500 for endowment to further assist the recipients — students with financial need "who have demonstrated a commitment to service above self and to the community."

The Oxford, Mississippi, foundation also underwrites awards for service given at Commencement to a graduating senior and a non-student associated closely with the college.

Shakespeare for Today's Audience: Converting Words to Understanding

By Megan McDonough

"Early in my career, I set myself the task of seeing every existing theatre in the world built prior to 1800," said Elizabethan theatre expert Franklin J. Hildy, speaking at Mary Baldwin during the Southeastern Theatre Conference symposium the college hosted in late March.

Franklin J. Hildy

And so he did, becoming one of the most knowledgeable people in the world about the staging of plays by Shakespeare and his contemporaries.

Hildy, professor of theatre at the University of Maryland and director of the Shakespeare Globe Center (USA) Research Archive, was among the notable scholars from as far as California and western Canada to attend the event. Its theme — "Elizabethan Performances in North American Spaces" — was especially apt for Mary Baldwin and Staunton. In partnership with Shenandoah Shakespeare and its Blackfriars Playhouse, the college offers master's degrees in Shakespeare and Renaissance literature in performance.

Hildy has long been intrigued by the planning and development of Blackfriars, the only authentic re-creation of Shakespeare's indoor theatre. He was a consultant in the reconstruction of the original Globe theatre, as he will be for the re-creation of the second version of that famous London theatre — after the original burned down — in Staunton.

In his keynote speech at the theatre symposium, Hildy championed Shenandoah Shakespeare's, and Mary Baldwin's, emphasis on techniques inspired by early staging — techniques intended to reveal what he calls the "theatrical language" embedded in Shakespeare's text. "If we could recover the theatrical language — the visual language — of Shakespeare, we could do a better job translating it for a modern audience," he said.

Hildy, who has written widely about his research, believes that performing Shakespeare's plays on an Elizabethan thrust stage, with the audience on three sides, is only the first step. As companies such as Shenandoah Shakespeare and the London Globe's continue to produce Shakespeare's plays in the spaces for which they were written, their understanding will continue to grow, he said.

Megan McDonough is a student in the M.Litt./MFA program.

More Funding For M.Litt., MFA Program

Thanks in large part to the interest and efforts of Charlotte McCormick '67, the Chicago-based Chauncey and Marion D. McCormick Family Foundation is giving $10,000 to Mary Baldwin's program offering a master of letters and a master of fine arts in Shakespeare and Renaissance literature in performance. The funding is one of several significant sources of support for the program, which has completed its second year.

Relay For Life Raises $12,500

The American Cancer Society Relay For Life on campus March 21–22 demonstrated the generous spirit and genius for organization at Mary Baldwin College. Spearheaded by Sarah Jane Engel '04, Erin Storey '05, and Christina Daniel, access services coordinator in Grafton Library, it generated more than $12,500 through donations, related fundraisers, and pledges for laps by 16 teams around MBC's Physical Activities Center track.

Described by the society as "a fun-filled overnight event designed to celebrate survivorship and raise money for research and programs of your American Cancer Society," Relay For Life "represents the hope that those lost to cancer will never be forgotten, that those who face cancer will be supported, and that one day, cancer will be eliminated."

Students from every class and virtually every MBC program, alumnae/i, faculty, staff, and friends helped plan and carry out the event.

Staunton Mayor John Avoli participated in the opening ceremonies, along with Patricia Hunt, college chaplain, and Debra Camden, assistant director of operations for Mary Baldwin's Adult Degree Program. Hunt and Camden joined others in the Survivors' Walk.

Vicky TenBroeck '05 of Manassas, Virginia, recruited her father for setup and cleanup. Fellow sophomore Carissa Tierney of Westminster, Maryland, walked alongside her parents and sister.

On the day that marked their 33rd wedding anniversary, Rebecca Dick '82, director of teacher education services at MBC, walked in memory of husband Jim, who died of cancer in January. The team that she led with Carole Grove, director of the Master of Arts in Teaching Program, raised more than $2,300 from alumnae/i, families, and friends as far away as Michigan and Texas.

For weeks before the relay, students solicited area businesses, resulting in donations of food and more than 100 door prizes and silent auction items. Pre-relay activities included a Rent-a-NULL Auction, at which first-year WWII students sold their energies to the highest bidders, and a raffle in which Betsy Johnson '06 won the right to "shadow" President Cynthia H. Tyson for a day.

Daniel, whose family has battled cancer, said she wanted to "do something to make people aware of the fight to find a cure. It was emotional as we remembered our loved ones during the luminaria ceremony and shared how cancer had affected our lives," she said. "I know that on March 21, 2003, MBC made a difference!"

Donations can be added to MBC's relay total until August 31. Checks payable to the American Cancer Society may be sent to Christina Daniel, Grafton Library, Mary Baldwin College, Staunton, VA 24401.

For more information on Relay For Life or the American Cancer Society, call 1-800-ACS-2345 or visit www.cancer.org.

Staff Earns Six CASE III Awards

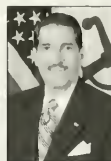

In the latest judging by the national, nonprofit Council for Advancement and Support of Education, Mary Baldwin College earned six District III awards: a Grand Award (gold) for MBC's 2002–03 Annual Fund direct mail package, three Awards of Excellence (silver), and two Special Merit Awards (bronze). The winning publications were the work of the entire College Relations team along with Development, and Alumnae/i staff. Gretchen Newman, director of art and printing services, designed all six. Entries receiving Grand Awards will compete with winners from other CASE districts for national honors.

CASE annually recognizes the best communication projects (publications, Web sites, and comprehensive campaigns) through an awards program administered by regional districts. District III covers Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.

Winning entries were displayed at the CASE District III Conference in Atlanta February 23–26 and will be archived at CASE International in Washington, D.C. Crista Cabe, associate vice president for college relations, attended the CASE conference and accepted the awards on behalf of her colleagues.

Grand Award winner "What's Your Flavor?" series

Assistant Secretary of the Navy William A. Navas Jr. was among the latest high-ranking military officials to visit the Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership at Mary Baldwin. A major general, Navas was on campus in March with his wife Wilda to learn more about WWII and how it might encourage more young women to become naval officers. They were briefed by cadets and viewed a parade conducted in their honor. Navas's last active-duty assignment was as the director of the Army National Guard. Before that, he served in a variety of senior-level positions in the Department of Defense.

MBC, BRCC Mark 10 Years As Adult-Degree Partners

Mary Baldwin and Blue Ridge Community College celebrated the 10th anniversary of their cooperative adult degree program with a reception at BRCC April 9.

Presidents Cynthia H. Tyson and James R. Perkins acknowledged the success of the partnership they developed to help adults earn a four-degree degree. Kathleen Stinchart, Mary Baldwin dean for academic outreach, commented on the natural fit of a good community college with a small liberal arts adult program that provides personal service.

Diane Ganiere, who has since retired as professor emerita of psychology (ADP), began making regular visits to BRCC's Weyers Cave campus in 1992 to advise students who wanted to continue their education through Mary Baldwin's Adult Degree Program. In 1993, the partnership agreement provided for a permanent MBC/BRCC office at Blue Ridge.

As it begins its second decade, the MBC/BRCC Adult Degree Program is managed by Marion Ward, director and academic advisor, and Susie Schmeissing, regional operations coordinator.

Judith Grey '65 Named MBC Major-Gifts Officer

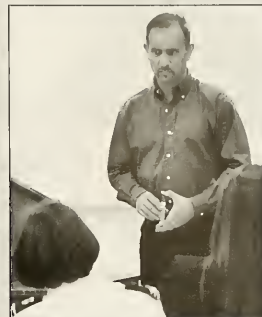

Judith Payne Grey '65 has joined the Mary Baldwin Development office as a major-gifts officer specializing in corporate and foundation fundraising.

A Norfolk, Virginia, native with an MBA from Columbia University, she has had top marketing positions with major companies, most recently Haarmann & Reimer Corp., a division of Bayer Corp., in Teterboro, New Jersey.

Grey has been active in community and college organizations. She is a former member of Mary Baldwin's Advisory Board of Visitors and Alumnae/i Board.

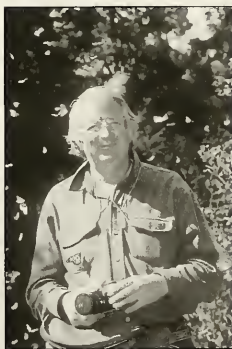

The war in Iraq was the topic as a television news reporter filmed discussion in assistant psychology professor Andreas Anastasiou's course, Psychology of Peace and Conflict Resolution. The segment by Harrisonburg ABC affiliate WHSV-TV was aired on the evening news.

Athena Yiamouyiannis, executive director of the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport, spoke at Mary Baldwin in March about the continuing quest for gender equity in school and college athletics. She noted that women's participation in sports has increased dramatically in the 30 years since Title IX, the federal requirement for equity in sports, was made law. She cautioned against changes in the provision or its interpretation that could discourage women. Yiamouyiannis majored in math and was president of undergraduate students at Ohio State University, where she was given the OSU Scholar Athlete Award. The nonprofit NAGWS, based in Reston, Virginia, has more than 4,000 educators as members. It promotes opportunities for girls and women in sports and addresses related issues.

Lincoln P. Brower, one of the world's experts on the migrating monarch butterfly, spoke about his research in giving the Mary E. Humphreys Biology Lecture in February. Brower is research professor of biology at Sweet Briar College and distinguished service professor emeritus of zoology at the University of Florida. Brower has received the Gold Medal of Zoology from the Linnean Society of London, a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Animal Behavior Society, and the Henry Walter Bates Award for Biology and Conservation of Tropical Butterflies. He has published hundreds of scientific papers and edited two books. Brower is working with the World Wildlife Fund-Mexico and the Monarch Butterfly Sanctuary Foundation to protect the major wintering sites of the monarch butterfly in Mexico.

The Mary E. Humphreys Biology Lecture Series was established in 1992 to bring prominent scientists to the campus to present public lectures. Sponsoring the series are friends and former students of Mary Humphreys, professor emerita of biology, who served on the biology faculty at MBC for 25 years until 1968.

Pierre Duplessis, M.D., secretary general and chief executive officer of the Canadian Red Cross Society, delivered the first in a series of health-care lectures made possible by the E. Rhodes and Leona B. Carpenter Foundation of Philadelphia, generous supporters of the Health Care Administration program at Mary Baldwin. He spoke in March about "September 11 and Its Aftermath — A Red Cross Response." Duplessis has a medical degree from the University of Montreal, a master's in public health from Harvard, and a specialty in community health from Laval University in Quebec, Canada. He has worked for hospitals, community health centers, a regional board of health, the Ministry of Health and Social Services of the Province of Quebec, and Quebec's College of Physicians.

ADP and Dean Kathleen Stinehart: A Decade of Change and Improvement

As Kathleen Stinehart, dean for academic outreach, bids farewell but not goodbye after nine years of overseeing the Adult Degree Program and related ventures, she offers a few thoughts about her Mary Baldwin stint and what comes next for her and, possibly, ADP.

The former kindergarten teacher and Iowa State University administrator and her husband, Alan Christy, explored a variety of options and places before settling on Mary Baldwin College as the best fit. Christy has been an adjunct instructor in the English Department. Stinehart recalls that her Iowa State friends “thought I was crazy” to leave that institution, “but I was looking for more adventure in my work life and more degrees of freedom than one can find in a big, overly organized bureaucracy.” And the two hardcore mid-westerners “thought it might be fun to try life in another part of the country.”

“We were charmed by both the college and the community here,” says Stinehart. “ADP already had its healthy, whole, and supportive climate when I arrived. In fact, that was one of the reasons I came. I was impressed with the magnificence of the adult-degree program this little college had managed to field. And I was impressed with the ADP faculty members. They have continued to amaze me in their supportive approach to their own leader all these years. Our relationship has not been the stereotypical faculty-administrator one. I’ve had a nine-year honeymoon with these folks!”

When Stinehart arrived in July 1994, she found that ADP was struggling with its success in attracting and advising students and offering an increasing array of courses. “It was sagging under the weight of its own systems — or, rather, lack of systems. Every student need was individually negotiated. This approach, which worked so well when the program was new and tiny, had become inefficient and exhausting for the faculty advising students. So I began with some streamlining efforts to release some of the stifled energy and creativity of ADP, and then I just went from there. These are not my individual accomplishments; they are the results of working with others.”

Stinehart and colleagues established systems, standards, and procedures to benefit students, faculty, and staff. They also stressed the use of computers — which made a lot of sense for adult students who work, have families, and use regional centers in addition to the Staunton campus. The changes and improvements, including the addition of a Web site, “allowed ADP to grow because they made the ongoing work of ADP faculty members less time-consuming; they now could focus on recruiting, problem-solving, thinking up nifty new for adult women.

In 1999, ADP won a Distinguished Program award for the mid-Atlantic region from the Association for Continuing Higher Education. A year earlier, it won two marketing awards for recruitment from the University Continuing Education Association. Stinehart & Co. also landed a chapter of Alpha Sigma Lambda, the national honor society for top-performing adult students. A recent student-satisfaction survey gave the program high marks from the people who matter most — the clients.

ADP’s future, as Stinehart notes, is up to the faculty and her successor. Ever bold, she does hazard a guess or two: more course and other information online, more regional centers, more recruiting of students at corporations where employers pay for education, majors and minors created specifically for adult students, and a closer relationship between ADP and graduate courses — “because once adults get into the ADP way of doing things, they want to continue that at the master’s level.”

“Mary Baldwin has done for me what she does for her students: given me the freedom and support to grow and change and try new things and, as a consequence, gain self-confidence,” says Stinehart. Her top contribution to ADP? “Taught MBC how wonderful its ADP is.”

Stinehart will open Cranberry’s, a natural foods store and café, on South New Street in downtown Staunton this summer. “I love food, I love healthy, I love being out on farms. It’s like visiting relatives when I was a kid. I love helping people learn. And MBC has confirmed for me what I suspected at Iowa State: I love running a right-livelihood small business. Which is really what ADP is. So here I go again!”

ideas, and participating more in their academic departments.”

Online study has grown rapidly from three courses and a dozen students to more than 40 courses and 100 students. Library services and course registration also were put online. Regional centers, now serving much of Virginia and the Washington area, have been started, expanded, or upgraded. The Women’s Institute for Leadership Development, known as WILD, provides an intensive summer week of self-exploration and leadership training

Diversity House Aptly Named

The official name of the residence hall is Scott House, but students who live or hang out there call it The Diversity House. Diverse they are, representing four continents — Asia, Africa, and North and South America — as well as different races and ethnic groups, inner cities, suburbs and small towns, and both private and public schools. Their tastes in music and decor differ, too, reflecting much about them.

The six juniors recently were the subject of a prominent story in Staunton's newspaper, The News Leader. "Diversity House is a union of different cultures," Antoinette Chase, one of its residents and a Bailey Scholar and peer mentor, told the paper. "We promote the idea that different cultures can exist" — and people from different cultures "can be friends," said Chase, a business major interested in marketing research.

It's not uncommon in society to "see white and black people together," Krystal Jimmerson told the paper, "but you don't see people who are truly friends."

Chase moved from Washington to northern Virginia. Jimmerson, a political science major considering law school, is from Newport News in southeastern Virginia. Getnesh "Mimi" Amde, a Health Care Administration major, grew up in Ethiopia and would like to manage a pediatric center some day. Rosemarry Mel (the only one of the six to live elsewhere on campus) is of Cambodian descent and is majoring in both Asian studies and business administration. She studied in Japan, where she hopes to work for an American company after graduation.

Mayra Barahona, a native of El Salvador, is studying health care and sociology and intends to work in a medical area. She also plays field hockey. Sarah Waggoner is from Gaithersburg, Maryland, but lived in more rural Buchanan in southwestern Virginia. A sociology major, she's eyeing graduate school, also potentially in medicine.

The young women got to know each other as freshmen in Spencer Residence Hall. Once friends, they developed their theme — diversity — for the special-interest housing Mary Baldwin offers. As part of that arrangement, they held a variety of cultural and social events this year.

The students also put together a brochure explaining Diversity House and introducing themselves. In it, they say: "We embrace our differences and share our cultures with each other. We would like to share our experience with others. The Diversity House shows that Mary Baldwin is working toward breaking down cultural and racial barriers. This house is an example to the college, prospective students, and the community."

Carey Mitchell, assistant professor of sociology at MBC, is an advisor to the young women. She told The News Leader: "They're best friends. It's an ideal situation. I think it's magnificent. They are the role models for friendship. They share their culture with each other. It's how we should interact with each other."

HILANTHROPY

Taking
Mary Baldwin's Success
Personally

Yes, the times are tough in many ways, especially when it comes to raising much-needed funding for colleges and universities. Across the country, institutions — big and small, public and private, wealthy and not so — have expressed concern. Once again, however, Mary Baldwin's alumnae/i, friends, and other supporters have come through. Giving of all kinds is extremely important to keeping Mary Baldwin strong and providing opportunities for still greater distinction.

As the many names that follow indicate, Mary Baldwin has no shortage of believers in the essential worth of an education that is practical in the best way: rooted in the core, enduring knowledge of the liberal arts, and stressing broadly applicable skills and critical thinking. Giving to Mary Baldwin makes that education not only inviting but also available to a broad diversity of students, including some of our most accomplished.

And you did give. The Class of 1967 observed its 35th reunion by raising nearly $85,000 in cash gifts and pledges (including five-year pledges) — the most of any class. Several other classes, including '47 (more than $77,000 in all gifts and pledges) and '77 (more than $46,000), were particularly generous as well.

Participation — the percentage of each class that gives — matters a lot, too. Foundations and corporations that consider making grants to colleges look at those numbers. So do those who rank colleges, such as U.S. News & World Report, which lists Mary Baldwin in the top tier of master's level universities in the South. (That category and status acknowledge our growing array of distinctive and increasingly popular undergraduate and graduate offerings.) For prospective students and their parents, giving rates reflect customer satisfaction. Alumnae/i who give know that they are investing in Mary Baldwin and that the value of their investments continues to rise steadily.

The class with the highest percentage of givers: '52, at nearly 60 percent! Close to half of the Class of 1962 gave, and the classes of '47, '57, '67 and '72 were not far behind.

If your name is not among those here, you know what to do. It's easy — you can even contribute online at www.mbc.edu (just click on the basket of apples). Or call, toll free: 1-800-622-4255. Get in touch. We want to add your name to the rosters published in the future.

Why do I give to MBC? It's simple. I want every woman who will stand still for it to have an education designed for women in a college that values capable women. We've been doing that here since Miss Mary Julia was a smart woman, known as the best businessman in Staunton because there wasn't a gender-appropriate term for her achievement.

The college made all the difference for me. For the first time, I knew that I was smart, that smart women are valued, and that I could aspire to goals other than home and family. I was so well prepared by my work here that graduate study didn't seem harder, only more extensive. My teachers were the equals of those I enjoyed later in fine graduate schools.

My daughter, Sarah Francisco '00, had a similarly fine experience in the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted at MBC and found herself better prepared for law school than cohorts who had never analyzed a text and defended their understanding orally, seen Windows, or held positions of leadership in college. Best of all, like me, she holds the one job she wanted enough to apply for.

I've been dreading this school year ever since I did the math back in 1984 when our youngest was born. This is the year we have three in college. So contributing to Mary Baldwin Annual Giving is not something we do on a whim. We have been so pleased with the opportunities Mary Baldwin provided our oldest, Diane, a senior. Although we can't afford to give much these days, we give what we can.

I imagine this is as tough a time as it's ever been for a private, single-gender school to keep the doors open and the lights on. I think Mary Baldwin's future is bright. I think the staff, faculty, and programs President Tyson leaves behind are stellar. We'll vote "yes" again with our checkbook, and I think other Mary Baldwin supporters should, too.

ELI ALFORD, FATHER OF DIANE E. ALFORD '03

As supervisor of the Spencer Society — students selected to take part in the Annual Giving phonathon — I assist students in contacting alumnae/i and help train them to solicit pledges. I also enjoy calling. Speaking with alumnae/i is addictive. I love to hear what they are doing.

I work with Annual Giving in many ways because I want to give something back to the school that has given me so much. I have been blessed with wonderful relationships and privileges at Baldwin and will continue to help Mary Baldwin raise money in the future.

As a member of the Class of 1986, I sometimes looked upon the challenges that President Tyson faced in her new administration and questioned the ongoing viability of the college as a women's college. But thanks to the vision, passion, precise message, and tireless effort of the Mary Baldwin community under Dr. Tyson's leadership, my diploma is one of the few stocks in my portfolio that is adding value. Mary Baldwin enjoys the distinction of being the fastest-growing women's college in Virginia.

I give to Mary Baldwin because I know how valuable alumnae/i contributions are to the college. Alumnae/i giving made it possible for me to go to MBC on a scholarship, and it was alumnae/i giving that helped to make my four years at MBC so memorable. From Late-Night Breakfast during exam week to the free unlimited Internet use in the computer labs, the contributions of alumnae/i permeated my everyday life at MBC.

Now I am an alumna, and it is my desire that every future student of MBC be able to enjoy the same wonderful experiences and education that I had. I know that that is possible only through continued financial support from the MBC alumnae/i.

UBAH ANSARI PATHAN '99

The community that is Mary Baldwin College gave me an excellent education both in and out of the classroom — thanks to the tremendous support and giving of those who came before me. I am now a part of the past of Mary Baldwin College, but I hope that the small amount of money that I can give will help continue to educate and grow future Squirrels.

Giving Societies

THE GIVING SOCIETIES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

(18)

I am happy to donate to Mary Baldwin College because it is a wonderful school, and it did many good things for me. I liked going to an all-girls school, and I have lifelong friends from my four years at Mary Baldwin.

GALE PALMER PENN '63

Why do I support Mary Baldwin College?

Quite simply, from the very beginning, I have wanted Mary Baldwin to be there as an option. I feel that choices define one's life, and to that end, we need options.

Large universities are not for everyone. Co-ed colleges are not for everyone. Single-sex colleges aren't either. Mary Baldwin must not merely endure as an option but remain a viable, attractive one — inspiring students and maintaining high academic standards.

It is essential that each of us make a commitment to MBC: supporting it, being ambassadors for it, keeping it vitally alive. We are grateful that Mary Baldwin has many beloved friends who give of themselves to help ensure its future, but the responsibility falls most directly to us, the alums.

We who chose the college should make it our legacy to others.

The Kiracofe Society

The Kiracofe Society is for deferred giving: charitable remainder trusts, charitable lead trusts, charitable gift annuities, life estates in real property, life insurance, or bequests. Gifts may be designated for certain uses or left for the college to decide what's best. Many donors direct their gifts to Mary Baldwin's endowment.

How fortunate I was to be able to attend Mary Baldwin College! I have always given to Annual Giving. However, two years ago I decided I would like to give to more than Annual Giving because of my love for Mary Baldwin. I established a charitable gift annuity. I couldn't believe how simple it was to set up this gift for endowment. I benefit as well — and the college takes care of all the details. I get a great deal of satisfaction knowing this gift is permanent and handled so professionally. I hope others will join me in building our endowment.

JMU's Ralph Cohen To Join MBC Faculty

Ralph Alan Cohen, a distinguished professor of English at James Madison University and a founder of Shenandoah Shakespeare, will leave that institution to become professor this fall in the Mary Baldwin College Department of English and the college's graduate program in Shakespeare studies. Cohen will continue as executive director and director of education at Shenandoah Shakespeare, based at Blackfriars Playhouse, the only authentic re-creation of Shakespeare's indoor theatre — a project that he oversaw.

"Mary Baldwin is extremely fortunate to have Ralph Cohen join its faculty," said Jeffrey L. Buller, dean of the college. "He brings our master of letters/master of fine arts program a level of expertise that we just couldn't have found anywhere else. We know Ralph well — he was one of our consultants when we designed that program — and we're certain that he and Mary Baldwin College are a perfect match for each other."

Cohen, who earned an undergraduate degree at Dartmouth College and a master's and Ph.D.

at Duke University, has taught courses at Mary Baldwin. He said he is delighted to become a full-time faculty member. "The graduate students are first-rate, and I want to do what I can to make the program worthy of them," he said. "So far it has succeeded beyond our expectations, and I am now convinced that it will soon be the best place anywhere to get an advanced degree in the teaching and performance of Shakespeare."

At JMU, Cohen has been honored as teacher of the year and as an "eminent scholar." He received Virginia's outstanding faculty award in 1987, the first year it was given. He has an honorary degree from Georgetown University.

A scholar, writer, and editor, Cohen also has directed 18 of Shakespeare's plays, including two productions of the playwright's favorite play, Antony and Cleopatra, and the first professional production of Richard III to use a woman in the title role. With the reconstructed Globe theatre in London, Cohen runs a summer Shakespeare institute that concentrates on plays in performance. He has directed National Endowment for the Humanities institutes on Renaissance staging and performance.

A native of Montgomery, Alabama, Cohen founded JMU's studies abroad program, which has locations in London, Paris, Florence, and Spain's Salamanca.

Buller said Cohen's hiring was made possible in part by a five-year grant awarded to the college last year by the E. Rhodes and Leona B. Carpenter Foundation, based in Philadelphia.

Moe Hardy Earns The Good Bounces

BY SHERRY R. COX '99

Where is it written that a basketball player must be tall — six feet or more — to be successful? Certainly not at Mary Baldwin College or at John Marshall High School in Richmond, Virginia. At both, Maneisha Rayshawn "Moe" Hardy '04 — 5 feet 3 inches on a "tall day" — has wowed crowds, teammates, and coaches with her ability to steal, pass, rebound, and score.

As a young girl, Hardy tried other sports, including volleyball and softball, but nothing felt right until her grandmother, with whom she lived, introduced her to basketball at age 7 and even showed her some moves.

Maneisha Rayshawn "Moe" Hardy '04, right

Hardy would accompany her grandmother to work at a nearby park, where she learned to love basketball. But there was a strict rule — homework first, a requirement that her grandmother still tries to enforce.

Growing up, Hardy played Amateur Athletic Union basketball for six years and high school ball four years. While at John Marshall, she played on three all-conference teams, was named Most Valuable Player twice, and as a junior, led the team in steals, points, and assists. Then-MBC Coach Robert Walters saw Hardy play and contacted her. She had looked at colleges closer to home but watched several Squirrels games and decided to apply to MBC.

The past two years, Hardy has played under Coach Jackie Bryan. "I'm used to coaches who yell at you," said Hardy. "Coach stays calm. And she listens to our ideas. You can talk to her about anything, not just basketball. The whole coaching staff is great. They care about us and expect the best from us on and off the court."

When not playing at MBC, Hardy stays in shape by working out with her old AAU team. Her step-father, one of her former high school and AAU coaches, suggests improvements, and she works toward accomplishing several each summer. Being in the National Guard — she's a sergeant with a unit out of Portsmouth, Virginia — helps keep her in shape, too, as does helping Bryan with summer camps at MBC for secondary-school students. During the year, Hardy keeps in touch with the teens, inviting them to watch the Squirrels and attending as many of their games as possible, even though "they pick on me because they are taller."

Despite "lots of injuries" during her three years at Mary Baldwin, Hardy has pounded the hardwood in 76 of 77 games, starting in 69. Not only has she consistently led the team in assists, Hardy has been a top scorer, ranking second in the Atlantic Women's Colleges Conference as a sophomore, and has earned spots on two all-conference teams. And she's a top-notch thief — of the basketball, that is — who last year ranked 10th in steals among National Collegiate Athletic Association Division III women's basketball players.

A captain for two years, Hardy said the recent season brought changes. "We were younger but more competitive," she said. "Increased recruiting has resulted in more talent on the team. Erica [Dabney] and Katrina [Scruggs] were awesome as freshmen. Having Erica in the middle made a big difference. She did a good job — impressed me. We spread the scoring around, and that's what made us a threat. We finished third even though we only had six or seven players most games because of injuries. And we were still trying to get to know each other."

This year, Hardy averaged nearly six rebounds per game, a feat that Bryan described as "awesome for a 5-foot-3-inch college player." She earned the MBC Coach's Award as the most valuable player. "Moe is coachable and dependable," said Bryan. "She was a leader on the court and the stabilizer, playing with much more consistency to help our many young players. We had a much more successful year because of it."

Hardy, too, is pleased with her evolving role as point guard — the floor leader who sets up plays. "As a point guard, you need to be able to communicate with the team and the coach — be sure everyone's in the right place. It's like being a coach on the floor. You have to be a voice leader. My first two years, I never talked much, and that was a problem."

Now that she has found her voice on the court, Hardy also is more comfortable speaking up in class. "I ask questions in class instead of waiting to speak to my professor one-on-one or asking questions by e-mail." Basketball has benefited her in other ways. "Basketball keeps me focused on school and what choices I make in life."

One of her choices as a sophomore was to sign up for the Army Reserve Officer Training Corps. After graduation in May 2004, Hardy will serve eight years as an Army officer. She hopes to play basketball for the Army and then play professionally overseas. And she might try coaching.

A computer information systems major, Hardy wants to earn a master's in computer engineering and program video games. Plans that might sound daunting to others just tumble out of this petite dynamo, no surprise to those who have followed her career at Mary Baldwin.

"Moe might be small in size but she is large in try," said Debra Wenger, her advisor and assistant professor of computer information systems. "She tries hard at everything, from juggling her academic course load with her ROTC and basketball commitments, to completing her challenging assignments for my courses, to giving her all for the Squirrels team."

Before focusing on life after college, Hardy has more immediate goals. One is to beat her step-father at one-on-one. Another is having her grandmother in the stands for some of her senior games. Her mother, who is a big part of her support system on and off the court, has already felt the pride of watching her daughter excel as a college athlete. Next season should be exciting. Hardy is closing in on two Mary Baldwin records: career assists and steals.

Squirrels Win Sports Honors

Quality outshone quantity as MBC's team of seven — four of whom were first-year players — completed regular season basketball action with a 7-6 third-place record in the Atlantic Women's Colleges Conference. Overall, the Fighting Squirrels finished 12-14. In tournament play, sixth-place Wilson College upset Mary Baldwin 75-65.

Freshman Erica Dabney ranked sixth in the nation among National Collegiate Athletic Association Division III women's basketball players in rebounds, averaging nearly 14 per game. Dabney won a spot on the all-conference first team, Maneisha Hardy was named to the second team, and Katrina Scruggs earned honorable mention.

The swimming Squirrels finished third in regular-season competition with a 1-2 conference record. They placed fourth in championship action. Captain Jenny Carman finished first in the 100-meter butterfly and second in the 50-meter freestyle. Jen Kukla swam to second in the 100- and 200-meter breast stroke, and Reiko Ishikawa finished second in the 100 freestyle. MBC's 200 freestyle relay team finished second.

Carman was all-conference first team, and Kukla joined Ishikawa and Anne Forsythe with honorable mention.

Dear Friends,

As I reflect on the leadership provided by President Cynthia H. Tyson, it is apparent to me that we alumnae/i have grown closer to the college as a result of her direct, dynamic and yet elegant style.

Her interest in getting to know alumnae/i all across the country has resulted in many of our graduates' being better connected to the college and more knowledgeable about our alma mater than ever before. Graduates are urged to know facts about the institution's various programs, understand its financial status, and appreciate the challenges of marketing a women's college.

Dr. Tyson's expectation is that when we are well informed we will become ambassadors for the college and share our knowledge with other alumnae/i. "It is your college!" can be heard wherever and whenever she speaks — in volunteer-board meetings, social gatherings, and individual conversations. She graciously asserts that Mary Baldwin will thrive if its alumnae/i remain committed and engaged and thanks us for our support of the college. I know that I, like many others, have been strongly influenced and involved with the college as a result of the vibrant messages delivered by this poised and eloquent lady.

We have been blessed to have Dr. Tyson. She has moved our beloved alma mater forward in innumerable areas. I wish her well in her retirement and know that she will remain associated with the college that she loves. I also look forward to working with a new president who will appreciate Dr. Tyson's legacy as she makes the presidency her own.

With warm regards,

Sue McDowell Whitlock

Crazy About Cats, But Not Just Any Cats

Betty White '63 is a cat fancier who judges fancy cats around the globe.

"My interest in pedigreed cats began when my husband came home one day with a Siamese kitten someone had dumped on a colleague's property," recalls White, who completed her undergraduate work at Mary Baldwin, majoring in history, when her husband, Julian, was hired to teach French. They moved west several years later when he joined the faculty of the University of New Mexico.

"Having grown up in Virginia with a Toy Manchester and never having owned a cat, I was intrigued with the beautiful blue eyes" of the Siamese, says White. "One thing led to another, beginning with attendance at a cat show, and I acquired another Siamese. I was eager to explore the Southwest anyway, and thought that traveling to cat shows would be a way to pursue a hobby and see the United States.

To say that I became thoroughly enamored of the Siamese breed is somewhat of an understatement, I suppose."

White acquired a reputation as a breeder of fine Siamese. The bloodlines of those cats are now all over the world. She also has written more than 30 articles about the breed and about pedigreed cats in general.

Once her children were grown, White gained admission to the rigorous, eight-month judge-training program of Cat Fanciers' Association Inc., the world's largest registry of pedigreed cats.

Qualified to judge all breeds of cats, she goes to 35 to 40 shows a year. Judging has taken her all over the United States and to Canada, Australia, The Netherlands, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Austria, Japan, and Malaysia.

"Cat judging is strictly a beauty contest," says White. "There is a standard for each breed that delineates the perfect cat." In shows, cats are judged against this standard. The one that comes closest wins best in show.

White says she always enjoys "talking about the world of fine cats," which, she says, is "not so unlike the world of fine dogs. It is a hobby that has been most rewarding to me."

MBC Grad Shares Sense of Hope

Kelly Mann '99, a medical student in Israel, was among notable young adults around the world interviewed by CNN International — the cable-news operation — for broadcast this past Christmas Day.

She and others were asked what they think of the world today and what they would like to change. Mann talked about the importance of focusing on hope for peaceful change in a violent world. She says she would like more youths to become active in health and health care "because I believe that when you reach your hand out to heal another person, in whatever capacity, you lose the ability to dehumanize that person and make him your enemy."

Mann is a third-year student at Ben Gurion University's Program in International Health and Medicine in Beer Sheva. "We work in collaboration with Columbia University in New York," she says. "The primary goal of the program is to create physicians who can bridge the gap between the developed world and the developing world. Along with the traditional Western medical curriculum taught in the United States, we take classes in disaster relief, aging around the world, world health systems, pediatrics in Africa, and even how to combat bioterrorism."

Just What Does 'Participation' Mean?

Sarah Benkendorf '06 spotted an opportunity to publicize Mary Baldwin College to millions of people and pick up a few dollars for doing so. And she doesn't have to apologize to the Department of Sociology and Social Work.

Benkendorf, who is in the college's Program for the Exceptionally Gifted, mined the MBC course catalog for a humor item she submitted to Reader's Digest, which enjoys one of the largest circulations of any publication in the world.

Her entry, on Page 79 of the April Digest:

Sociology 205 Death and Dying:

A lecture course with some student participation required.

Ha ha. Presumably raising a hand isn't life threatening. Maybe the department isn't laughing. Its faculty has deleted the ambiguous "student participation" for the course description appearing in the next edition of the catalog. Benkendorf is $100 ahead — and the national exposure surely was worth more than that to the college.

Thanks, Volunteers! (You are one, aren't you?)

A big thank you from the college for all that you are doing for your alma mater! Mary Baldwin could not thrive without your kindness, generosity, and time. As you know, the college's staff cannot be everywhere all of the time. Invitations to fall college fairs will start to roll in soon, and we would love to hear from you. We need volunteers in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York (especially Long Island), Delaware, Massachusetts, and Florida. If you live in one of these states (or any other) and would like to help Mary Baldwin recruit strong, well-rounded students, please call us at 1-800-763-7359 or e-mail rbruce@mbc.edu.

In the Bag

BRECKEN ELISABETH GEIMAN '06

Dean's List Student Fashion Designer Musician

I have grown up encouraged to love and appreciate art (my mother, Lisa Geiman, is an artist) and to nourish my creativity. I love fashion and keeping up with the newest trends. I began making handbags about two years ago. I saw the popularity of inflatable bags, and I took "inner tube" handbags one step further. I began using actual inner tubes and pool rafts and came up with my own shape. I put found objects between translucent layers: unusual tissue paper, rhinestones, foil, Christmas tinsel, pieces of wrapping paper. I also used anything shiny or metallic and any kind of animal print motif.

Last summer I started making handbags from translucent vinyl shower curtains. Behind these layers I add metallic material. I also use denim to create the outer layer. I line each handbag with a print and embellish each with vintage leather, which I fringe and use to make straps. Each bag bears beads and a feather. I also use vintage tapestry. I stitch the bags together with heavy-duty thread on an upholstery machine.

I call my handbags BEG-ME Bags because my initials are B.E.G. I add a little spice — I use red leather lips as my logo, imprinted with the BEG-ME emblem. My bags are sold in a high-end specialty store in Nashville. Owners of my bags include country-music stars: The Dixie Chicks, Carolyn Dawn Johnson, and Terri Clark. The bags are also in the costume shop of HBO's "Sex and the City."

I play the guitar and sing, and I'm writing songs. I was recently named a finalist in a statewide talent contest. I'm recording a demo. At Mary Baldwin, I'm a member of Baldwin Charm and the Choir.

As the Rain Commenced

A persistent drizzle, typical of a cold and damp spring, forced the 161st Commencement under a big tent outside the Physical Activities Center, where many of the attending families and friends watched the ceremony — Cynthia H. Tyson's last as Mary Baldwin's president — on a big screen. Tyson was surprised with an honorary degree. Also receiving one was prominent painter Judith Godwin, who entered the college with the Class of 1952. Nearly 300 degrees were granted, including the first four in the master's program in Shakespeare studies. The last name called that soggy Sunday, May 18, was Brenna Zortman, daughter of the Commencement speaker, Rear Admiral James M. Zortman, commander of the Naval Air Force, Atlantic Fleet. Commencement coverage is on the Mary Baldwin Web site at www.mbc.edu and will be in the fall Mary Baldwin College Magazine.
